FOREWORD

This Code consists of one hundred thousand five-letter code ciphers with at least two-letter difference between each and every word. No transposition of any two adjoining letters will make another word in the book, and we assert that it is the first time this feat has been fully accomplished for 100,000 words.

Another merit is that one-letter mutilations practically detect themselves.

Elimination of transpositions makes for better transmission of messages which is the object sought both by cable companies and users.

It enables cable companies to give more perfect service and when errors do occur, makes detection of mutilation easier.

Time being the essence of all cabling, freedom from error insures the maximum benefit from any interchange of messages. Often offers expire or markets change before corrections can be secured.

Using the Acme Code, maximum safety is assured.

This must appeal to every code user.

Claims made for facility and simplicity in coding messages thereby saving words and cost have usually been disappointing. The Acme Code has been compared with all general codes and proved its worth. Even against a complicated and comprehensive private lumber code with which a test was made, the Acme Code effected a saving. We beg users to test the merits of the Code for themselves and be convinced.

Its easy and simple operation, combined with saving in cost commends its use for domestic as well as foreign messages.

Seventy-five thousand five-letter code ciphers have been allotted to words, short phrases and long phrases. All of these have been selected with understanding and discretion by A. C. Meisenbach, the compiler of the Acme Commodity and Phrase Code, who has had twelve years of experience in coding and decoding messages. Mr. Meisenbach has an expert's understanding of cable users' requirements, based on a practical education in the best kind of a school, i. e., many years in charge of the cable department of some of our largest and most important export and import firms.

Intelligent, sustained, and experienced effort has been made to correct the known shortcomings and deficiencies in codes generally.

Aside from the fact that this book is the work of an expert and an authority in code building, not the least recommendation is that the Acme Code has been developed with the enthusiasm which represents a life ambition of one thoroughly equipped for such an effort.

Twenty-five thousand ciphers are allotted to commodities.

In other general codes claiming to deal with several commodities, a glance at them will show that the references are so indifferent as to be valueless for any practical purpose. In this Code the commodity references mean exactly what we claim for them. Provision for a cheap, effective and usable means of cabling about them, that will provide a real service and supply a world wide need in each and every trade, this Code attempts to cover. We urge the fullest examination of the book, confident that we are not claiming for it anything that is not fully justified.

We have attempted a new idea in general codes. We believe a close analysis will bear us out that the Acme Code represents the very last thought in codes, that it is in effect what we have tried to make it—a general code embodying a number of private codes compiled to cover special trades but all combined in one book, affording a simple, safe, elastic, cheap but effective and comprehensive means of cabling.

Make up some sample messages and we are sure you will be convinced that any ordinary requirements for quoting, offering, negotiating, advising about or relating to General Matters, Chartering, Chemicals, Coffee, Lumber, Rice, Steel, Tea, etc., etc., with all the necessary corresponding data concerning letters of credit to be furnished and documents required against the latter, as well as engaging freight even to the extent of naming any vessel in Lloyds Register of Shipping has been provided for in a way never before attempted, much less accomplished.

Finally, there are included five different combination tables, which are to be used in conjunction with this Code, or are available for any private code or need.

1. Acme Multiplex Combination
2. Offer and Order Combination
3. Lumber Specification Combination
4. Ten-Figure Combination
5. Thirteen-Figure Combination

Only by a thorough examination will the worth of these be understood and appreciated.

We confidently believe that in the Acme Code we have established a new standard which will merit commendation and support from all code users.

Every endeavor has been made to eliminate all errors either of omission or commission, but we cannot accept responsibility should any be found.

MUTILATIONS

To assist in detecting these we have included in the Code the Acme Mutilation Table.

Here again we have produced something entirely new and we believe thoroughly effective.

It expedites the work of detection.

Do not depend upon our statement alone, but give it an understanding trial and we are confident every user will admit it shortens the time necessary to check mutilations and makes the work vastly easier.

It is simplicity itself.

Instead of having to run through columns of tabulated letters which are mixed up without regard to any order, you are confronted in this Code with a table in which the

First and Second letters are arranged in alphabetical order,

The Third letter in similar order, and again

The Fourth and Fifth in alphabetical order.

Compare it with any other mutilation table and visualize what we are trying to tell you.

Using signs, it means your eye finds the first and second letter at a glance, because these are in columns in alphabetical order. Place your pencil point on these letters, draw the pencil down the column and you arrive at the third letter and still without removing the pencil from the table you move it from left to right till you come to the fourth and fifth letters.

No one who has had any experience in this kind of work but will admit the great amount of time saved and facility with which one can make the necessary check.
